

Campus Visits

Campus visits for prospective students are not required for admission, but are strongly recommended. The campus visit is one example of student-initiated interest that the University considers when making admission decisions. A typical visit includes a group information session with an admission counselor and a student-led tour with optional opportunities for attending a meeting with a faculty member or coach, or an informational interview with a current student. Other special visit opportunities include specialized facility tours, lunch with a student host, and an information session with the Sewanee Career Center. Class visits are available to admitted students from mid-January through April.

Students may schedule a visit by registering on the Office of Admission's website. Group information sessions and campus tours are available year round and non-evaluative interviews are available during the academic year. Campus tours are offered regularly throughout the year in both the morning and afternoon. Half-day Saturday Preview events are offered on select Saturdays in both the fall and spring. All non-evaluative interviews are conducted by either members of the Admission counseling staff or carefully selected and trained seniors in the college. Interviewers are interested in learning about not only the student's academic achievements, but also about their extracurricular activities and interests.

The Office of Admission, located in Fulford Hall, is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. (Central Time).
