

The Tennessee Department of Health has COVID-19 assessment sites available across the Southeast region. Following the CDC testing guidelines, patients with fever, cough, shortness of breath, travel to impacted areas, or contact with a known case should consult their private healthcare provider and then call any of these health departments. If testing is found to be appropriate following a phone assessment, arrangements then will be made.

The Department of Health can test at any county health department if individuals have trouble getting to one of the sites below. Residents are encouraged, however, to use these larger sites. They have the most test kits, personnel, and protective equipment.
