

On the western face of the Cumberland Plateau, between Nashville and Chattanooga, sits the village of Sewanee. The campus, residential areas, lakes, forests, and surrounding bluffs on 13,000 acres owned by the University of the South and called the Domain.

The distinctive campus architecture borrows from the Gothic tradition of Oxford and Cambridge, with five sandstone buildings and garden pathways nestled into a wooded landscape, soaring bell towers, and—at the spiritual and physical center of the campus—the majestic All Saints' Chapel, modeled on the great European cathedrals.

Sewanee was founded in 1867 by clergy and lay delegates from Episcopal dioceses throughout the South. They selected a site in Sewanee on the Cumberland Plateau about 60 miles west of Chattanooga.

Sewanee • Village and the University

Local landowners and the Sewanee Mining Company donated nearly 10,000 acres for the enterprise. On October 10, 1860, the founders laid the cornerstone for a university campus that would eventually grow to house 1,500 students.

Sewanee's residents, students and faculty are proud of this place. We welcome you, whether you're a tourist, historian, prospective student or outdoorsman. Enjoy the waterfalls, hiking and biking trails and scenery, as well as our shops, restaurants and historic sites!
